NOTICES AND PERMISSIONS

These Components (game board, deeds, lookup charts) are © Copyright 2010 Intersystem Concepts, Inc.

The PDF licensee is permitted to print the Components onto paper for personal, non-commercial use. For all other entities or potential uses, prior to printing and/or distribution of this PDF or its Components you must obtain advance, express written permission of Intersystem Concepts, Inc. No other use is permitted. Rail Baron and RBPedit are trademarks of Intersystem Concepts, Inc.

PRINTING SUGGESTIONS

These pages are designed to print/fit onto 8.5 x 11 inch paper (use 'fit to page' sizing). We recommend card stock. The deeds are designed to print/fit onto 2 x 3.5 inch business cards on sheets of 10 cards, such as Avery brand stock number 8471.

CUTTING SUGGESTIONS

The game board and lookup chart pages have a solid line parallel to their long edge. If you trim the pages at that line they will fit inside bookshelf-game-sized boxes.

The dashed lines along various edges of the game board pages are places you can cut with scissors to create interlocking tabs. The tabs mate with cutout areas on adjacent pages so that the pages of the game board can physically attach during use.

OTHER ITEMS NEEDED TO PLAY

To play, you will need train markers (pawns), play money and three dice from a board game. The rules of play and printable play money can be found at our Web site.

Version: 2010-08-31

It is the 1890s in the Southeastern United States, and overbuilding of railroads has led to bank failures and an economic panic... the perfect environment for a skillful railroad baron to thrive.

The historically-based railroads of SE1 can be connected into larger networks in much the fashion the Atlantic Coast Line, Seaboard Air Line and Southern Railroad did. Due to lengthy tracks stretches served by few railroads, you might seek track usage alliances with opponents. The RF&P remains public, which means it licenses trackage rights so that all players can ride it as if it were their own.

For details on how to play, please consult the rules. Background locomotive photo used with the permission of Dave Hiteshew.
